Brooklyn G & F Rush Hour Service Advisory

Due to an ongoing Con Edison power problem affecting subway signals in Brooklyn, customers should expect limited service along the F Line during this evening's rush period, while G service remains suspended between Bedford-Nostrand Avenue Station and Smith-Ninth Streets Station.

Until further notice, F trains are operating only every ten minutes between Jamaica-179th Street and Stillwell Avenue-Coney Island. As a result, there is very limited F train service to Brooklyn. Customers should avoid taking the F and should instead take the B or D train to a nearby station in Brooklyn.

There is no G train service in either direction between the Bedford-Nostrand Avenue Station and the Smith-9th Street Station. As an alternate, there is a shuttle train running along the G Line between the Bedford-Nostrand Avenues Station and the Hoyt-Schermerhorn Streets Station.

In order to maintain this limited service through the affected area, MTA New York City Transit power distribution employees have set up several portable generators. These generators will remain in place until Con Ed repair operations are completed.
