MTA New York City Transit Snow Update

With several more inches of snow expected in the next few hours, the Department of Subways is moving out-of-service trains onto underground storage tracks instead of outdoor storage yards so that they will be available for evening rush hour service.

Given the predicted weather conditions and the need to take express tracks out of service for train storage, customers are advised to factor in additional extra travel time to their normal commutes. During this period, the following trains may run local on sections of their routes: A E D F N Q 2 3 4 5. Following the evening rush hour, trains will be stored underground overnight, in preparation for Tuesday's morning rush hour.

In addition, as of 1 p.m. today, NYC Transit and MTA Bus will be restoring Limited-Stop bus service in all five boroughs; this service pattern was suspended at 3:45 a.m. as a result of the snow storm.

Customers can keep abreast of changes in regularly scheduled subway and bus service by logging on to www.mta.info and reviewing posted Service Alerts.
