LIRR Continues To Run Reduced Am Rush Service Thurs., May 12 Due To On-Going Amtrak Derailment Repairs In East River Tunnel

Tunnel to be Returned to Service for Friday Morning's Rush Hour

The Long Island Rail Road continues to closely monitor the progress of Amtrak's repair work in the East River tunnel stemming from Sunday's Amtrak derailment. At this time, the tunnel is scheduled to be returned to service for Friday morning's rush hour service.

As a result of the on-going repair work in the tunnel, the LIRR will again reduce, by about a quarter, the number of trains that the LIRR normally operates into Penn Station during the morning rush. On Thursday morning, a total of 22 of the 98 trains normally operated into Penn Station will be canceled, terminated or diverted – this represents the same service plan that was used during Wednesday morning's rush.

Once again, customers should allow extra travel time and expect scattered 10 to 20 minute delays. Stopping patterns on some trains may change – please listen for announcements or consult station signage.

The LIRR expects that AM and PM rush hour service will continue to be significantly affected through Thursday, May 12. The ability of the LIRR to restore full service on Friday morning is directly dependent on the progress of Amtrak's repairs. The LIRR is in constant communication with Amtrak and is assessing Amtrak's ability to meet the deadline to restore full service Friday morning. Amtrak crews replaced 282 damaged track ties, and crews are scheduled to replace stone ballast in the track bed into Thursday. Once track and signal repairs are completed, testing must also be performed before the tunnel can be restored for train service.

Of the 22 trains canceled, terminated at Jamaica or diverted:

Twelve will be canceled outright at their eastern origination point.

Five trains will operate normally then terminate at Jamaica where customers can board other trains for Penn Station or take an E train to Manhattan. For a less crowded and more comfortable ride, passengers for lower Manhattan are encouraged to use the J and Z lines rather than the E to and from Jamaica. New York City Transit will honor LIRR tickets on the subway.

Four trains will be diverted to Atlantic Terminal, Brooklyn.

One train will be diverted to Hunterspoint Avenue.
