Post Hurricane Sandy NYCT/MTA Bus Service Resumes

Limited service rolls out with no fare for riders

MTA bus service began operating on a reduced schedule at 5 p.m., Tuesday afternoon, three days after the city's transit services were suspended in advance of Hurricane Sandy. Buses began operating on a fare-free basis and on a Sunday schedule. A full bus schedule is expected for Wednesday. Rides will continue to be fare-free.

"This is a small sign that we are beginning a return to normalcy, even though we still have a long way to go," said MTA Chairman Joseph J. Lhota. "Not only will we be able to serve our regular bus customers, but we will now have the flexibility to supplement some portions of subway services when they begin their recovery."

Buses began rolling out of their depots and heading to selected, high-volume routes at 3 p.m. Tuesday. We will be running as close to a full schedule as possible on Wednesday.
