Tim Horton's Is Coming to White Plains Train Station

Longtime Newsstand Operator Retires

The popular Canadian coffee shop chain Tim Horton's is building an outpost at the White Plains train station, Metro-North Railroad announced today.

The franchise will be operated by Gateway Foods, which also will begin operations of the newsstand at the station, replacing longtime newsstand operator Gary Waxman, who decided to retire.

The company offered the highest rent for both the 232-square-foot concession space and the 156-square foot newsstand. There were 21 proposals for the concession space and 12 for the newsstand in response to a recent request for proposals.

Gateway will pay $79,200 a year for the coffee concession and $63,360 for the newsstand with 35 annual rent increases during the 10-year term. The board of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority approved the lease Wednesday.

Mr. Aziz Premji, Gateway's president, has extensive experience operating quick service food and beverage operations in high traffic transit locations in metropolitan New York and New Jersey area.

Gateway proposes to make extensive renovations to the space to better utilize the limited storage space at the station which will enhance the appearance of the main entrance of the station, the busiest station in New York State outside Grand Central Terminal. The White Plains Station is used by nearly 20,000 people a day.
